About the Speaker

Richard Primack is a Professor of Biology at Boston University with research interests in climate change biology. For the past 14 years, Prof. Primack and his colleagues have been investigating the effects of a warming climate on the plants and birds of Massachusetts, with an emphasis on continuing the observations made 160 years ago by Henry David Thoreau in Concord.

Volunteers and Weevils Put the Brakes on Mile-a-Minute

If you've visited the northwest portion of the Blue Hills called Fowl Meadow, you've undoubtedly walked past a lot of the invasive vine, mile-a-minute. You'll recognize mile-a-minute by its perfectly triangular leaves... not to mention its tendency to climb over everything in its way. This fast-growing vine can grow up to six inches a day!

Mile-a-minute was first discovered in the northern part of Fowl Meadow in 2004. Volunteers have been pulling this invasive weed since then to protect a nearby endangered species. In 2007, when it was discovered that the Asian vine had taken over 35 acres in the southern portion of Fowl Meadow, the state realized that manually pulling the weed was not sufficiently effective and began to look for additional help... in the form of tiny flying friends.

On Reebok's corporate volunteer day this summer, Sally Gifford pulls the mile-a-minute weed in Fowl Meadow.

Since 2010, the Massachusetts Department of Agricultural Resources has released over 31,000 weevils in Fowl Meadow. The state introduced weevils as a 'biocontrol' because they feed exclusively on mile-a-minute.

Sarah M. Grubin, State Pest Survey Coordinator from the Massachusetts Department of Agricultural Resources, acknowledges that "While we are optimistic about the weevils continuing to feed on [mile-a-minute], it could be

Prof. Primack has been involved in educating the public about the effects of climate change through public talks and popular writing, including a recent book about his work Walden Warming: Climate Change Comes to Thoreau's Woods. Prof. Primack will specifically address the impact of climate change on the Blue Hills Reservation.

a while before we see any significant changes. But ideally, once a biocontrol is established, it's a self-sustaining control!"

If you see mile-a-minute outside the Blue Hills, please report it to the state at massnrc.org/pests/mamreport.aspx. And if you'd like to help remove mile-a-minute or other invasive plants, come to one of our monthly trail maintenance events. Milton Students Tackle Lyme Disease Prevention

Over 300 fourth-grade Future Problem Solvers from Milton Public Schools helped their community learn about Lyme disease this spring. Friends of the Blue Hills teamed up with teacher Bill Baino and Milton Public Health Director Carolyn Kinsella to introduce students to the signs and symptoms of Lyme disease and how the increase in Lyme disease has been linked to the declining health of our forests. Students then shared their new knowledge by designing posters to help educate the community.

Some of the posters were displayed over the summer at Milton Town Hall, Cunningham Park Hall and the Milton Public Library.

A Gift that Honors a Lifetime of Loving the Blue Hills

Rex and Margie Anderson raised their family in the shadow of the Blue Hills. They lived on York Street in Canton, and they couldn't drive down their street without seeing the long shadow of the Blue Hills. Visiting the Blue Hills was a welcome retreat especially for Rex who walked two miles a day. Often those walks led him to the Blue Hills.

For their children, Sheri and Ken, childhood was filled with activities in the Reservation: picking blueberries and blackberries along the trails, laughing at the otters at the Trailside Museum, swimming at Fisherman's Beach, attending nature camp at Chickatawbut, and celebrating Easter sunrise service atop Great Blue.

Rex continued hiking in the Blue Hills well into his 70s, and Sheri remembers a poignant moment when she—as an adult-- invited him to join her on a hike around Ponkapoag. He had long forgotten this particular trail, but together, they rediscovered it and walked it often. When a medical condition forced Rex off the trails, he started walking up the access road to Great Blue, always admiring the spectacular panoramic view from the summit.

When Sheri married Mark Ingalls and started a family in Easton, she did not visit the Blue Hills as often, but they continued to maintain a connection to the place her family loved so much. A new generation was introduced to the Blue Hills, and Mark volunteered regularly doing trail maintenance with his co-workers at Dedham Savings.

Sheri and Mark made a generous donation to the Friends of the Blue Hills in memory of Rex and Margie. "We have a lot of happy memories of the Blue Hills," Sheri explained. "They will always be important to our family." The Friends of the Blue Hills is grateful that Sheri and her family chose to honor Rex and Margie by ensuring that future generations will be able to enjoy the Blue Hills as much as they did.

Margie and Rex Anderson instilled in their children a deep and abiding love of the Blue Hills.

Summer Soiree Honors Members of the Hilltop Society

This summer, members of the Hilltop Society were honored for their generosity at a cocktail party at the home of board member Laura Beebe, whose estate abuts the Blue Hills Reservation. Karl Pastore, South Region Director at the Department of Conservation and Recreation, spoke to those gathered about priorities for the Reservation in the coming year.

The Hilltop Society, founded in 2015, recognizes members who have given $1,000 or more in one calendar year to the Friends of the Blue Hills.

For more information, visit FriendsoftheBlueHills.org/hilltop-society-benefits or contact Judy Lehrer Jacobs at 781-828-1805 or judy@FriendsoftheBlueHills.org.

Help Eliot Tower and Visitor Pavilion Get Much-Needed Facelift

The Eliot Tower is a popular destination in all four seasons.

The Department of Conservation and Recreation, the Friends of the Blue Hills, and interested volunteers are working together to restore the Eliot Tower and Visitor Pavilion located at the summit of Great Blue. This historic structure was built by the famed landscape architect Charles Eliot in the 1930s as part of the New Deal government work program.

The tower offers spectacular panoramic views of Boston, Massachusetts Bay and the Blue Hills Reservation. DCR is also repairing the nearby Eliot Bridge, which was built in 1904. If you would like to join the committee “Friends of Eliot Tower,” please email info@FriendsoftheBlueHills.org.

The North Face and Chakra Power Yoga sponsored a series of free hike and yoga sessions throughout the Blue Hills over the summer. This session included a hike up Wolcott Path and yoga at Eliot Tower.
